

Dear Matt and J.J.,

Back in 1998, I was a depressed teenager living in Canada. When I started watching Felicity, it was the first time that I felt like there was someone out there who understood me. Felicity became my friend; all of the characters did. But also, you guys: the writers and creators... I felt so seen by you! It was a relief.

In those days, I thought and talked a lot about Felicity. I printed out pictures of the cast and taped them, along with quotes from the show, to my school agenda (I know y'all love an agenda/day planner!). I dressed up as "creepy Felicity" for Halloween in grade 10. I even applied to be on the MTV show Fanatic. I made a very funny video, but didn't have access to decent video equipment so the quality was terrible. Well, that makes me sound crazy but I'm okay with that. ;)

In the years that followed, I re-watched the show many times. My college roommate, Rena, and I basically watched the DVDs on a loop. It was always on in our apartment. Even after college, I would watch Felicity whenever I was sad or stressed or just wanted to feel comforted.

It's not a stretch to say that Felicity is a foundational text of my life. It's not just that it inspired me to get a degree in communications and film production, I think I'd be a different person without Felicity. And I don't really have words to adequately thank you for that.

When the "Dear Felicity" podcast came out and I heard every cast member, in turn, say how thrilled they would be to do a reunion, I got inspired. These last few years, I've been changing directions in my career and trying to break into television writing. Meanwhile, my former college roommate/bff/fellow Felicity superfan is now a comedian and writer in LA. The pieces all came together and we knew we had to write this script.

So, here is our take on where the characters of Felicity might be today. You likely would have made different choices. And for the record, we aren't married to any of these choices. We know things change in development. But I hope you like what we wrote. I hope, at least, that you don't think it's absolute blasphemy! Hahaha.

If you do like our script, let's talk. Give me a call or shoot me an email.

Love,

Emilie
